DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

In order to render a decision, the Panel has to establish whether the conditions of Article 21(1) of Regulation (EC) No. 874/2004 ("the Regulation") are satisfied:

“A registered domain name shall be subject to revocation, using an appropriate extra-judicial or judicial procedure, where that name is identical or confusingly similar to a name in respect of which a right is recognized or established by national and/or Community law, such as the rights mentioned in Article 10(1), and where it: (a) has been registered by its holder without rights or legitimate interest in the name; or (b) has been registered or is being used in bad faith.”

Article 10(1) describes such prior rights to "include, inter alia, registered national and community trademarks, geographical indications or designations of origin, and, in as far as they are protected under national law in the Member-State where they are held: unregistered trademarks, trade names, business identifiers, company names, family names, and distinctive titles of protected literary and artistic works".

The Complainant has referred to, and provided evidence in the form of the Certificate of Registration, its in Malta registered and thereby protected company name Phoneparts Limited.

Accordingly, the Panel finds that the Complainant has proved its rights to the company name Phoneparts Limited, and that this right is recognizable under the meaning of Article 10(1) of the Regulation.

The disputed domain name was registered on September 13, 2015, which is 18 months before Complainant's company name registration.

However, it is further noted from the communication between the Complainant and the Respondent (copies from e-mail, provided by the Complainant), that the Respondent replied to the Complainant not using an e-mail address connected with the disputed domain name. In the said correspondence, the Respondent did not refer to any use or specific interests, other than answering the Complainant's offer to buy the disputed domain name by claiming a rather high monetary compensation in order to accept transfer of <phoneparts.eu> to the Complainant. It is further noted that the Respondent has not replied to the Complaint, thereby missing the possibility to contradict the Complainant's conclusion that Respondent has no legitimate interest.

The question is, however, if this is enough to decide in favour of the Complainant?

There are some details in the dispute that speaks against such a decision:

Although the Complainant has a valid right, namely a company name registered within the European Union, the distinctiveness of the said company name is rather weak. In fact, the company name is a generic combination of words, describing the business of the Complainant: phone + parts.

As noted above, the Respondent registered the disputed domain name prior to the registration date of the Complainant's company name. As <phoneparts.eu> is descriptive, and there is no details in the case indicating the the Respondent was aware of the Complainant's plans to create a similar company name, the Panel cannot see that <phoneparts.eu> was registered in bad faith.

Only passive holding itself is not usually viewed as bad faith, nor lack of legitimate interest, especially when the later name rights are not clearly distinctive, or a complainant can show that the Respondent had prior knowledge of Complainant's upcoming rights.

Owners of descriptive domain names, registered prior to any other's name rights, have the full right to claim a more market based price for that domain name in case someone express interest in buying that domain name. This is especially in cases where the later name right has low distinctiveness.

The Panel therefore concludes that there is at least possibilities that the Respondent has legitimate interest in the disputed domain name <phoneparts.eu>.

DECISION

For all the foregoing reasons, in accordance with Paragraphs B12 (b) and (c) of the Rules, the Panel orders that the disputed domain name <PHONEPARTS.EU> shall not be transferred to the Complainant.
